Our 2019 Accomplishments

Racial justice, cross-border organizing, and international accompaniment give rise to a brand new GAP in 2020

2019 saw a backlash against historical memory and heightened border and mega-project militarization, forwarded by powers whose influence can be traced back to the Internal Armed Conflict. In response, NISGUA doubled down on racial liberation, horizontal exchanges between Indigenous Peoples, and the foundation of our work: accompaniment of defenders of life. In the context of capitalist colonialism and global fascism, our work showed us that a new path is necessary, giving life to an accompaniment program resourced to take on this violence with innovative forms of organizing.

PRESENTING:
GAP INTERNACIONALISTA!

After nearly thirty years of accompaniment, we are re-launching our Guatemala Accompaniment Program (GAP) as an internacionalista volunteer program to connect cross-border movements for Indigenous sovereignty and immigrant justice.

This year, we held an organizer space between ACODET (resistance against Xalalá Dam), Anti-Colonial Land Defense (water protectors against Line 3 Pipeline), and Frontera Water Protection Alliance (water protectors in El Paso, TX). The following day, ACODET presented their statement on free, prior, and informed consent with signatures from 15 Indigenous tribes and organizations, as facilitated by NISGUA. Additionally, our webinar about the Maya Achi sexual violence case with Breaking the Silence (BTS) educated audiences in the U.S. and Canada about this historic struggle by Indigenous women survivors of sexual violence.

2019: YEAR AT A GLANCE

Accompaniment of 295
defenders of life in Guatemala

We accompanied 23 at-risk transitional justice & land defense groups. Despite threats, activists have continued, citing accompaniment as one of their key tools for safety.

Exchanges between
Indigenous leaders

Our partners from across Turtle Island tell us that Indigenous cross-border exchanges build a stronger, safer movement by mutually-resourcing defenders of life.

“Organizations like NISGUA have been fundamental and strengthening for our struggles in defense of life and our human rights.”
—Marta Muñoz, Peaceful Resistance against Escobal Mine

Indigenous connections: Delegations with NMSU and IEN

NISGUA facilitated an exchange for the Indigenous Environmental Network (IEN), “an alliance of Indigenous peoples whose mission it is to protect the sacredness of Earth Mother from contamination and exploitation by strengthening, maintaining and respecting Indigenous teachings and natural laws.” The trip was in service to IEN’s commitment to global grassroots environmental organizing, Indigenous women’s leadership, and grassroots feminism aligned with Indigenous cosmovision.

Cross-border education: NISGUA featured in CALDH’s CREOMPAZ report

Strategic and responsive communications on landmark cases is an essential component of monitoring legal process led by social movements. This year, our report on CREOMPAZ (bit.ly/CREOMPAZ) was featured prominently in a Center for Human Rights Legal Action (CALDH) photo exhibition publication.

“It was the most comprehensive resource on the case we could find.”
-Edith López, Communications Coordinator for the CREOMPAZ case

Successes in racial justice: GAP cohort 2019

In 2017, we launched our Racial Justice Framework, a declaration of our long-time commitment to racial liberation. One of our benchmarks was to increase the participation of Indigenous and POC accompaniers and delegates. Along with two all-Indigenous delegations in 2019, we welcomed our first majority Latinx GAP cohort, who will be integral to the creation of GAP Internacionalista!

Promoting safety and dignity for Guatemalan defenders of life

This year, the Morales administration and Guatemalan Congress took a variety of steps to ensure impunity for crimes of the past and attack historical memory. This regressive work included a proposed Amnesty Law to protect and even free war criminals. In response, NISGUA provided accompaniment to groups under threat, organized grassroots education, and mobilized our base to call their Congresspeople in rejection of the Amnesty Law. After massive national and international outcry, the Guatemalan Congress postponed voting on the proposal.

As threats and violence increased in the context of a court-ordered consultation of the Xinka People around the Escobal Mine, NISGUA provided emergency responses and urgent actions. When a pro-mining mob in Jumaytepeque attacked the Xinka Leadership Council and criminalized Xinka Parliament lawyer Quelvin Jiménez, NISGUA staff was present to provide physical accompaniment, coordinate emergency advocacy, and dispel state lies about Quelvin’s arrest. In the days after, with the Coalition Against Mining Injustice in Guatemala (CAMIGUA) we coordinated a letter to the Guatemalan government with signatures from 65 organizations demanding justice for the attacks.

Politicizing major current events through the lens of Indigenous sovereignty

1. A NYT journalist told us that our reporting on the militarization of Huehuetenango was some of the only that directly covered analysis from Indigenous and local people.

2. Our coverage of the safe third country agreement highlighted not only the way it endangers immigrants, but also violates Indigenous territory.

3. We translated urgent information about the state of siege into English and explained why it is an extractivism-motivated invasion of Maya Q’eqchi’ territories.

NISGUA ORGANIZES IN THE BAY

This year, NISGUA deepened relationships with immigrant justice and Indigenous organizers. We saw two major victories: Governor Newsom signed AB32 - a huge step toward ending private detention in CA, and the CA Superior State Court of Alameda denied another attempt to develop a mixed-use building on the sacred Chochenyo Ohlone Shellmound. Organizing works!

Successes in racial justice: GAP Scholarship Fund led by Christina Reyes raises $7000+

“Being an accompanier is different when you have directly experienced the effects of U.S. imperialism all over Central America. I am going into this work already knowing that the topics and issues I am prepping to tackle will push me into deep reflection and might isolate and trigger me in ways that white U.S. accompaniers could never understand. But it also means that the information and connections made through GAP will hopefully be able to reach communities that can utilize them fully here in the U.S. and elsewhere.” -Christina Reyes (they/them)

WHERE WE’RE GOING:

In 2020, NISGUA will relaunch our accompaniment program as GAP INTERNACIONALISTA!

Collaborating with former accompaniers, activists, and partnering organizations, our new program will:

1. Organize to link campaigns led by Guatemalan social justice movements with their counterparts in the U.S. and expand opportunities for volunteers to organize;

2. Strengthen relationships in communities, deepen existing partnerships, and maintain historic principles of accompaniment;

3. Generate horizontal exchange between communities in the U.S. and Guatemala that are impacted by the same global systems of oppression.

“We thank NISGUA for having always visited us in our communities. They have also learned from us. We have lived together with them. They have walked through mud and fallen many times... So we are really thankful that accompaniers have come from other countries to visit us where we live... And we need more accompaniment! When companies and the government see that international people are present in communities, they realize that we are not alone.”

-José Gómez, ACODET coordinator

COMING UP IN 2020:

Tour with Association Pop No’j

Our 2020 tour will facilitate direct exchanges between Association Pop No’j and Indigenous leaders, immigrant rights activists, and organizers in the U.S.

Who: Association Pop No’j resources and accompanies Maya communities in the development of political, socioeconomic and cultural capacities. One of their focuses is migration & its impact on Indigenous youth and families.

When: April 2020

Where: Las Cruces, NM; Albuquerque, NM; Tucson, AZ; Los Angeles, CA
